I used to limit myself. I made my first documentary at Country Day when I didn’t get into the school play my senior year. Film was something I had never really considered before, but was the best thing that ever happened to me.

It wasn’t at the very top of my class academically, or a star athlete, but I knew what I was good at and Country Day helped me pursue it. So much attention is paid to each student in every way. They allowed me to focus on what I knew I could do best. Getting into N.Y.C. Film School and having a film exhibited at Cannes were dreams come true.

I used to limit myself. I don’t do that anymore.

You leave Country Day with the mindset that you’re a winner. Everything that you do and everything you present to the world is done with such enthusiasm and in the right spirit. Everybody I know who graduated from Country Day is on such a beautiful path.

It’s bigger than an educational experience - it’s a life experience.
